

Esposito, Georgia (GOV)

From: Esposito, Georgia (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 5:25 PM
To: Esposito, Georgia (GOV)
Subject: Daily Schedule - Saturday, March 7th, 2015
Attachments: 1A_coffee with sen mceachin dr mccabe 3.7.15.docx

[Redacted]

FINAL

Schedule for Governor Terry McAuliffe
Saturday, March 7th, 2015
(Richmond→McLean)

Staff Contact: John Heflin-[Redacted]

EPU: [Redacted]

Weather: Richmond: High 51/Low 35, Sunny
McLean: High 44/Low 31, Mostly Sunny

Attire: Suit and tie

Previous RON: Executive Mansion

10:00-10:45am Coffee with Senator McEachin and Dr. Jill McCabe
Location: Executive Mansion
Staff: John Heflin
Attendees: Senator McEachin, Dr. McCabe, Andrew McCabe, and Secretary Stoney

[Redacted]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

GOVERNOR'S CONFIDENTIAL WORKING PAPERS

Meeting Briefing Information

(Carrie Henderson Caumont, [REDACTED])

Meeting Name: Coffee with Senator McEachin and Dr. Jill McCabe
Date: Saturday, March 7th, 2015
Mtg. Time: 10:00-10:45am
Location: Executive Mansion
Contact: Sen. McEachin [REDACTED]
Dr. McCabe [REDACTED]
Staff: Secretary Stoney
Attendees: Dr. Jill McCabe, Andrew McCabe (husband), and Sen. Donald McEachin

Purpose of meeting and topic(s) to be covered:

This is a candidate recruitment meeting. McCabe is seriously considering running against State Senator Dick Black. You have been asked to close the deal.

Bio Information on Meeting attendees:

DR. JILL McCABE

Dr. Jill McCabe (46) is a physician, working full time in the Pediatric Emergency Department at Inova Loudoun Hospital. She is the Medical Director of the Pediatric Emergency Department at Inova Loudoun, the Course Director for Pediatric Advanced Life Support at Inova Healthsource, and an Assistant Professor in the School of Medicine at Georgetown University. In addition, she is the Vice President of the Medical Staff of Inova Loudoun Hospital. She is the mother of two children George McCabe and Maggie McCabe. Jill attended Duke University School of Medicine.

ANDREW McCABE (husband)

GOVERNOR'S CONFIDENTIAL WORKING PAPERS

Andrew G. McCabe currently serves as the assistant director in charge of the FBI's Washington Field Office. In this capacity, he oversees all programs in the nation's second-largest FBI field division and is the FBI's primary representative to the Washington, D.C., and Northern Virginia communities.

Mr. McCabe began his career as a special agent with the FBI in 1996 and was assigned to the New York Field Office. There, he investigated a variety of organized crime matters and in 2003 was named supervisory special agent of the Eurasian Organized Crime Task Force, a joint operation with the New York City Police Department.

In 2006, Mr. McCabe shifted his focus to counterterrorism matters when he was promoted to FBI Headquarters in the Counterterrorism Division. He went on to oversee U.S.-based international terrorism investigations in the International Operations Section.

In 2008, Mr. McCabe was promoted to assistant special agent in charge of the Washington Field Office's Counterterrorism Division, where he managed several programs, including the National Capital Response Squad, Rapid Deployment Team, domestic terrorism squad, cyber-counterterrorism targeting squad, and extraterritorial investigations squad.

Mr. McCabe was selected as the first director of the High-Value Interrogation Group in 2009. In 2010, the Director of National Intelligence certified Mr. McCabe as a senior intelligence officer.

In 2011, Mr. McCabe returned to the Counterterrorism Division at FBI Headquarters, where he served as deputy assistant director and assistant director.

Most recently, Mr. McCabe served as executive assistant director of the National Security Branch. Overseeing all FBI national security programs, including the Counterterrorism Division, the Counterintelligence Division, the Intelligence Division, the Weapons of Mass Destruction Directorate, the Terrorism Screening Center, and the High-Value Interrogation Group, Mr. McCabe ensured the FBI successfully executed its primary mission to defend the United States against national security threats.

Before entering the FBI, Mr. McCabe worked as a lawyer in private practice. He received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Duke University and Juris Doctor from Washington University School of Law.

Recent Newspaper Articles:

You met Jill on a Medicaid expansion tour of Inova Loudoun Hospital. See part of story highlighted.

In Va., fight over Medicaid expansion continues

By Michael Laris and Laura Vozzella February 24, 2014

Gov. Terry McAuliffe hit the road to sell Medicaid expansion Monday, touring a Northern Virginia hospital to make the human and business case for insuring more poor and working people — and to pressure House Republicans who have pledged to block the effort.

Launching a two-week media blitz, McAuliffe (D) sharply rapped the GOP-led House of Delegates for its role in the current impasse. He told doctors and administrators at Inova Loudoun Hospital that as a businessman and a person of deep faith, he finds Republicans' refusal to expand coverage nonsensical economically and "very disturbing" morally.

McAuliffe pointed to the 400,000 additional people who would qualify for Medicaid in Virginia under the Affordable Care Act, 70 percent of whom are in households where at least one person has a job. Under a plan written by moderate Republican Sen. John C. Watkins (Powhatan) — and rejected by the House — uninsured people earning up to 138 percent of the federal poverty level would qualify for coverage. (The poverty level for a family of four is $23,850.) The proposal would use $1.7 billion a year in federal taxes collected in Virginia under Obamacare to buy private health insurance for those individuals.

"They come home from work on a hard day. They sit on their couch. And they think, 'I could get health care for the first time. I can provide for my family. It's already paid for,'" McAuliffe said in an interview. "How do you look that person in the eye and explain this? How? These are working folks. They work hard. I just have a hard time with it, to be honest with you, a hard time with it. We owe it to them, and they've waited long enough."

McAuliffe also acknowledged what was obvious 120 miles south in Richmond on Monday: that the solution to the deadlock over Medicaid is unlikely to come quickly. There, dueling business groups joined the fray by casting the proposed expansion as either a helpful jolt to the economy or an irresponsible increase in spending. The governor said it is likely the issue won't be resolved before the scheduled March 8 end of the General Assembly session.

The Virginia Chamber of Commerce endorsed an approach similar the Senate's "private option" plan, which would require enrollees to have a job or be looking for one. The chamber's plan would require an audit and reauthorization every four years, something not in the Senate proposal. And it endorses the two-year audit of Medicaid the House is pushing for, although, unlike the House version, it would not wait for the audit's completion before expanding the program.

Barry DuVal, president of the chamber, ticked off the details on the 11-point plan and said it would allow Virginia to tap into federal tax dollars to lower health-care costs and improve the health of its citizens.

GOVERNOR'S CONFIDENTIAL WORKING PAPERS

"We understand it's politically difficult, but the business case is compelling," said F. Kevin Reynolds, president of Cardinal Bank and one of several business leaders who attended the news conference.

An hour later in the same room, House Speaker William J. Howell (Stafford) and other Republican legislators joined the National Federation of Independent Business to warn against expansion and criticize the Senate's decision to fold Watkins's plan into its budget proposal.

Howell said Medicaid, which without expansion has grown at 8 percent a year — and 1,600 percent over the last 30 — is already a budget-buster. "It's gonna break us," he said.

"Not everybody in the business community thinks expanding Medicaid is a good idea," said Nicole Riley, state director of the independent business federation, which is headquartered in Tennessee. "Many business leaders prefer complete reform of Medicaid before tossing more money on a raging wildfire."

McAuliffe said that many hospitals in rural parts of the state are facing existential financial troubles and that even in Loudoun, one of the state's wealthiest jurisdictions, failing to bring home billions of dollars in tax dollars collected under Obamacare would have far-reaching consequences at the local hospital. Tens of millions of dollars that could be used for everything from high-tech research to covering the poor would be missing, hospital officials said. "It's like the federal gas tax you pay every time you fill up the car," McAuliffe said. The message from House Republicans is "we don't want it," McAuliffe said.

To try to take the edge off of pain being felt by the state's hospitals, Republican delegates have proposed $118.6 million in additional Medicaid payments over two years.

But Katharine M. Webb, senior vice president of the Virginia Hospital & Healthcare Association, said the offer falls far short of what the hospitals would receive if there were 250,000 people newly insured under Medicaid. That would bring hospitals $692 million, Webb said. "The difference is vast," she said.

Virginia's hospitals have been aggressive proponents of Medicaid expansion. Hospital executives and their backers point to the hundreds of millions of dollars a year they are set to lose because of cuts that were part of the Affordable Care Act.

As part of the restructuring of federal health-care spending under Obamacare, certain Medicare cuts were accompanied by efforts to insure more people. But the U.S. Supreme Court ruled the Medicaid expansion optional, rather than a requirement, as originally written.

Covering hundreds of thousands of new patients in Virginia under Medicaid could help the hospitals' bottom lines by adding new customers. Sixty-six of the 67 Republicans in the House of Delegates voted against the Medicaid expansion plan.

GOVERNOR'S CONFIDENTIAL WORKING PAPERS

Republican opponents say that the federal government is an unreliable long-term partner, given its own budget woes. The federal government has agreed to pay 100 percent of the Medicaid expansion costs for the first three years, and, after a gradual reduction, would pay 90 percent of those costs in the future. But even the 10 percent would be a costly hit to Virginia's budget, House Republicans say.

Barbra Jill McCabe, a top pediatric emergency physician and manager, helped show McAuliffe around the pediatric ER in Loudoun, where a child screamed behind a glass partition. Regardless of the different opinions on how to improve America's health system, she said, "I think expanding care for the folks who need it has to be part of the solution. . . . I'm faced with patients every day who are struggling because they don't have that access."

She said that with more patients on Medicaid, her emergency room would be less busy, which would benefit the children they treat.

"They'd be on medication to manage their asthma. They would have good preventative care. They would get their immunizations. . . . They would address their obesity. All of the epidemics that are coming along, primary care wants to try to address that," McCabe said. "But if they don't have access, how are they going to get that taken care of? They end up in here because they have complications that aren't being addressed."

Burch, Denise (GOV)

From: Stoney, Levar (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 11:15 AM
To: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Subject: RE: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

From: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 10:44 AM
To: Stoney, Levar (GOV)
Subject: FW: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

Levar,

What are the details for the coffee tomorrow w/ Sen. McEachin?

D.

From: Bray, Liza (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 9:26 AM
To: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Subject: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

Hey Denise,

Any chance I can get the below info by 1:00pm today for tomorrow's coffee? Thanks!!

Attendees: Dr. Jill McCabe, Andrew McCabe (husband), Sen. Donald McEachin

Purpose of meeting and topic(s) to be covered:

This is a candidate recruitment meeting. McCabe is seriously considering running against State Senator Dick Black. You have been asked to close the deal.

Bio Information on Meeting attendees:

DR. JILL McCABE

Dr. Jill McCabe (46) is a physician, working full time in the Pediatric Emergency Department at Inova Loudoun Hospital. She is the Medical Director of the Pediatric Emergency Department at Inova Loudoun, the Course Director for Pediatric Advanced Life Support at Inova Healthsource, and an Assistant Professor in the School of Medicine at Georgetown University. In addition, she is the Vice President of the Medical Staff of Inova

Loudoun Hospital. She is the mother of two children George McCabe and Maggie McCabe. Jill attended Duke University School of Medicine.

ANDREW McCABE (husband)

Andrew G. McCabe currently serves as the assistant director in charge of the FBI's Washington Field Office. In this capacity, he oversees all programs in the nation's second-largest FBI field division and is the FBI's primary representative to the Washington, D.C., and Northern Virginia communities.

Mr. McCabe began his career as a special agent with the FBI in 1996 and was assigned to the New York Field Office. There, he investigated a variety of organized crime matters and in 2003 was named supervisory special agent of the Eurasian Organized Crime Task Force, a joint operation with the New York City Police Department.

In 2006, Mr. McCabe shifted his focus to counterterrorism matters when he was promoted to FBI Headquarters in the Counterterrorism Division. He went on to oversee U.S.-based international terrorism investigations in the International Operations Section.

In 2008, Mr. McCabe was promoted to assistant special agent in charge of the Washington Field Office's Counterterrorism Division, where he managed several programs, including the National Capital Response Squad, Rapid Deployment Team, domestic terrorism squad, cyber- counterterrorism targeting squad, and extraterritorial investigations squad.

Mr. McCabe was selected as the first director of the High-Value Interrogation Group in 2009. In 2010, the Director of National Intelligence certified Mr. McCabe as a senior intelligence officer.

In 2011, Mr. McCabe returned to the Counterterrorism Division at FBI Headquarters, where he served as deputy assistant director and assistant director.

Most recently, Mr. McCabe served as executive assistant director of the National Security Branch. Overseeing all FBI national security programs, including the Counterterrorism Division, the Counterintelligence Division, the Intelligence Division, the Weapons of Mass Destruction Directorate, the Terrorism Screening Center, and the High-Value Interrogation Group, Mr. McCabe ensured the FBI successfully executed its primary mission to defend the United States against national security threats.

Before entering the FBI, Mr. McCabe worked as a lawyer in private practice. He received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Duke University and Juris Doctor from Washington University School of Law.

Recent Newspaper Articles:

You met Jill on a Medicaid expansion tour of Inova Loudoun Hospital. See part of story highlighted.

In Va., fight over Medicaid expansion continues

By Michael Laris and Laura Vozzella February 24, 2014

Gov. Terry McAuliffe hit the road to sell Medicaid expansion Monday, touring a Northern Virginia hospital to make the human and business case for insuring more poor and working people — and to pressure House Republicans who have pledged to block the effort.

Launching a two-week media blitz, McAuliffe (D) sharply rapped the GOP-led House of Delegates for its role in the current impasse. He told doctors and administrators at Inova Loudoun Hospital that as a businessman and a person of deep faith, he finds Republicans' refusal to expand coverage nonsensical economically and "very disturbing" morally.

McAuliffe pointed to the 400,000 additional people who would qualify for Medicaid in Virginia under the Affordable Care Act, 70 percent of whom are in households where at least one person has a job. Under a plan written by moderate Republican Sen. John C. Watkins (Powhatan) — and rejected by the House — uninsured people earning up to 138 percent of the federal poverty level would qualify for coverage. (The poverty level for a family of four is $23,850.) The proposal would use $1.7 billion a year in federal taxes collected in Virginia under Obamacare to buy private health insurance for those individuals.

"They come home from work on a hard day. They sit on their couch. And they think, 'I could get health care for the first time. I can provide for my family. It's already paid for,'" McAuliffe said in an interview. "How do you look that person in the eye and explain this? How? These are working folks. They work hard. I just have a hard time with it, to be honest with you, a hard time with it. We owe it to them, and they've waited long enough."

McAuliffe also acknowledged what was obvious 120 miles south in Richmond on Monday: that the solution to the deadlock over Medicaid is unlikely to come quickly. There, dueling business groups joined the fray by casting the proposed expansion as either a helpful jolt to the economy or an irresponsible increase in spending. The governor said it is likely the issue won't be resolved before the scheduled March 8 end of the General Assembly session.

The Virginia Chamber of Commerce endorsed an approach similar the Senate's "private option" plan, which would require enrollees to have a job or be looking for one. The chamber's plan would require an audit and reauthorization every four years, something not in the Senate proposal. And it endorses the two-year audit of Medicaid the House is pushing for, although, unlike the House version, it would not wait for the audit's completion before expanding the program.

Barry DuVal, president of the chamber, ticked off the details on the 11-point plan and said it would allow Virginia to tap into federal tax dollars to lower health-care costs and improve the health of its citizens.

"We understand it's politically difficult, but the business case is compelling," said F. Kevin Reynolds, president of Cardinal Bank and one of several business leaders who attended the news conference.

An hour later in the same room, House Speaker William J. Howell (Stafford) and other Republican legislators joined the National Federation of Independent Business to warn against expansion and criticize the Senate's decision to fold Watkins's plan into its budget proposal.

Howell said Medicaid, which without expansion has grown at 8 percent a year — and 1,600 percent over the last 30 — is already a budget-buster. "It's gonna break us," he said.

“Not everybody in the business community thinks expanding Medicaid is a good idea,” said Nicole Riley, state director of the independent business federation, which is headquartered in Tennessee. “Many business leaders prefer complete reform of Medicaid before tossing more money on a raging wildfire.”

McAuliffe said that many hospitals in rural parts of the state are facing existential financial troubles and that even in Loudoun, one of the state’s wealthiest jurisdictions, failing to bring home billions of dollars in tax dollars collected under Obamacare would have far-reaching consequences at the local hospital. Tens of millions of dollars that could be used for everything from high-tech research to covering the poor would be missing, hospital officials said.

“It’s like the federal gas tax you pay every time you fill up the car,” McAuliffe said. The message from House Republicans is “we don’t want it,” McAuliffe said.

To try to take the edge off of pain being felt by the state’s hospitals, Republican delegates have proposed $118.6 million in additional Medicaid payments over two years.

But Katharine M. Webb, senior vice president of the Virginia Hospital & Healthcare Association, said the offer falls far short of what the hospitals would receive if there were 250,000 people newly insured under Medicaid. That would bring hospitals $692 million, Webb said. “The difference is vast,” she said.

Virginia’s hospitals have been aggressive proponents of Medicaid expansion. Hospital executives and their backers point to the hundreds of millions of dollars a year they are set to lose because of cuts that were part of the Affordable Care Act.

As part of the restructuring of federal health-care spending under Obamacare, certain Medicare cuts were accompanied by efforts to insure more people. But the U.S. Supreme Court ruled the Medicaid expansion optional, rather than a requirement, as originally written.

Covering hundreds of thousands of new patients in Virginia under Medicaid could help the hospitals’ bottom lines by adding new customers.

Sixty-six of the 67 Republicans in the House of Delegates voted against the Medicaid expansion plan.

Republican opponents say that the federal government is an unreliable long-term partner, given its own budget woes. The federal government has agreed to pay 100 percent of the Medicaid expansion costs for the first three years, and, after a gradual reduction, would pay 90 percent of those costs in the future. But even the 10 percent would be a costly hit to Virginia’s budget, House Republicans say.

Barbra Jill McCabe, a top pediatric emergency physician and manager, helped show McAuliffe around the pediatric ER in Loudoun, where a child screamed behind a glass partition. Regardless of the different opinions on how to improve America’s health system, she said, “I think expanding care for the folks who need it has to be part of the solution. . . . I’m faced with patients every day who are struggling because they don’t have that access.”

She said that with more patients on Medicaid, her emergency room would be less busy, which would benefit the children they treat.

“They’d be on medication to manage their asthma. They would have good preventative care. They would get their immunizations. . . . They would address their obesity. All of the epidemics that are coming along, primary care wants to try to address that,” McCabe said. “But if they don’t have access, how are they going to get that taken care of? They end up in here because they have complications that aren’t being addressed.”

Office of Governor Terry McAuliffe
1111 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Virginia 23219
804-371-0828

Burch, Denise (GOV)

From: Bray, Liza (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 12:46 PM
To: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Subject: RE: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

Coffee is from 10:00-10:45am. Thanks!

From: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 12:46 PM
To: Bray, Liza (GOV)
Cc: Lewkow, Victoria (GOV)
Subject: RE: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

Hi Liza,

Levar does plan to attend the coffee tomorrow. Is it at 10 or 10:30 am?

Sen. McEachin's cell is: [REDACTED]

Dr. McCabe's cell is [REDACTED]

Thanks!

Denise

From: Bray, Liza (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 11:29 AM
To: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Subject: RE: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

Thanks! And if you have a contact # for mceachin or mccabe that would be great!

From: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 11:27 AM
To: Bray, Liza (GOV)
Subject: RE: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

I'm not sure that he is planning to attend. I'll ask him and will let you know.

From: Bray, Liza (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 11:27 AM
To: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Subject: RE: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

Will Levar be there? Also, do we have a contact number for them? Thanks!

From: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 11:23 AM

To: Bray, Liza (GOV)
Subject: FW: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

Liza,

Please see thread below

Denise

From: Stoney, Levar (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 11:15 AM
To: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Subject: RE: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

From: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 10:44 AM
To: Stoney, Levar (GOV)
Subject: FW: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

Levar,

What are the details for the coffee tomorrow w/ Sen. McEachin?

D.

From: Bray, Liza (GOV)
Sent: Friday, March 06, 2015 9:26 AM
To: Burch, Denise (GOV)
Subject: coffee with sen. mceachin and dr. mccabe saturday

Hey Denise,

Any chance I can get the below info by 1:00pm today for tomorrow's coffee? Thanks!!

Attendees: Dr. Jill McCabe, Andrew McCabe (husband), Sen. Donald McEachin

Purpose of meeting and topic(s) to be covered:

This is a candidate recruitment meeting. McCabe is seriously considering running against State Senator Dick Black. You have been asked to close the deal.

Bio Information on Meeting attendees:

DR. JILL McCABE

Dr. Jill McCabe (46) is a physician, working full time in the Pediatric Emergency Department at Inova Loudoun Hospital. She is the Medical Director of the Pediatric Emergency Department at Inova Loudoun, the Course Director for Pediatric Advanced Life Support at Inova Healthsource, and an Assistant Professor in the School of Medicine at Georgetown University. In addition, she is the Vice President of the Medical Staff of Inova Loudoun Hospital. She is the mother of two children George McCabe and Maggie McCabe. Jill attended Duke University School of Medicine.

ANDREW McCABE (husband)

Andrew G. McCabe currently serves as the assistant director in charge of the FBI's Washington Field Office. In this capacity, he oversees all programs in the nation's second-largest FBI field division and is the FBI's primary representative to the Washington, D.C., and Northern Virginia communities.

Mr. McCabe began his career as a special agent with the FBI in 1996 and was assigned to the New York Field Office. There, he investigated a variety of organized crime matters and in 2003 was named supervisory special agent of the Eurasian Organized Crime Task Force, a joint operation with the New York City Police Department.

In 2006, Mr. McCabe shifted his focus to counterterrorism matters when he was promoted to FBI Headquarters in the Counterterrorism Division. He went on to oversee U.S.-based international terrorism investigations in the International Operations Section.

In 2008, Mr. McCabe was promoted to assistant special agent in charge of the Washington Field Office's Counterterrorism Division, where he managed several programs, including the National Capital Response Squad, Rapid Deployment Team, domestic terrorism squad, cyber- counterterrorism targeting squad, and extraterritorial investigations squad.

Mr. McCabe was selected as the first director of the High-Value Interrogation Group in 2009. In 2010, the Director of National Intelligence certified Mr. McCabe as a senior intelligence officer.

In 2011, Mr. McCabe returned to the Counterterrorism Division at FBI Headquarters, where he served as deputy assistant director and assistant director.

Most recently, Mr. McCabe served as executive assistant director of the National Security Branch. Overseeing all FBI national security programs, including the Counterterrorism Division, the Counterintelligence Division, the Intelligence Division, the Weapons of Mass Destruction Directorate, the Terrorism Screening Center, and the High-Value Interrogation Group, Mr. McCabe ensured the FBI successfully executed its primary mission to defend the United States against national security threats.

Before entering the FBI, Mr. McCabe worked as a lawyer in private practice. He received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Duke University and Juris Doctor from Washington University School of Law.

Recent Newspaper Articles:

You met Jill on a Medicaid expansion tour of Inova Loudoun Hospital. See part of story highlighted.

In Va., fight over Medicaid expansion continues

By Michael Laris and Laura Vozzella February 24, 2014

Gov. Terry McAuliffe hit the road to sell Medicaid expansion Monday, touring a Northern Virginia hospital to make the human and business case for insuring more poor and working people — and to pressure House Republicans who have pledged to block the effort.

Launching a two-week media blitz, McAuliffe (D) sharply rapped the GOP-led House of Delegates for its role in the current impasse. He told doctors and administrators at Inova Loudoun Hospital that as a businessman and a person of deep faith, he finds Republicans' refusal to expand coverage nonsensical economically and "very disturbing" morally.

McAuliffe pointed to the 400,000 additional people who would qualify for Medicaid in Virginia under the Affordable Care Act, 70 percent of whom are in households where at least one person has a job. Under a plan written by moderate Republican Sen. John C. Watkins (Powhatan) — and rejected by the House — uninsured people earning up to 138 percent of the federal poverty level would qualify for coverage. (The poverty level for a family of four is $23,850.) The proposal would use $1.7 billion a year in federal taxes collected in Virginia under Obamacare to buy private health insurance for those individuals.

"They come home from work on a hard day. They sit on their couch. And they think, 'I could get health care for the first time. I can provide for my family. It's already paid for,'" McAuliffe said in an interview. "How do you look that person in the eye and explain this? How? These are working folks. They work hard. I just have a hard time with it, to be honest with you, a hard time with it. We owe it to them, and they've waited long enough."

McAuliffe also acknowledged what was obvious 120 miles south in Richmond on Monday: that the solution to the deadlock over Medicaid is unlikely to come quickly. There, dueling business groups joined the fray by casting the proposed expansion as either a helpful jolt to the economy or an irresponsible increase in spending. The governor said it is likely the issue won't be resolved before the scheduled March 8 end of the General Assembly session.

The Virginia Chamber of Commerce endorsed an approach similar the Senate's "private option" plan, which would require enrollees to have a job or be looking for one. The chamber's plan would require an audit and reauthorization every four years, something not in the Senate proposal. And it endorses the two-year audit of Medicaid the House is pushing for, although, unlike the House version, it would not wait for the audit's completion before expanding the program.

Barry DuVal, president of the chamber, ticked off the details on the 11-point plan and said it would allow Virginia to tap into federal tax dollars to lower health-care costs and improve the health of its citizens.

"We understand it's politically difficult, but the business case is compelling," said F. Kevin Reynolds, president of Cardinal Bank and one of several business leaders who attended the news conference.

An hour later in the same room, House Speaker William J. Howell (Stafford) and other Republican legislators joined the National Federation of Independent Business to warn against expansion and criticize the Senate's decision to fold Watkins's plan into its budget proposal.

Howell said Medicaid, which without expansion has grown at 8 percent a year — and 1,600 percent over the last 30 — is already a budget-buster. “It’s gonna break us,” he said.

“Not everybody in the business community thinks expanding Medicaid is a good idea,” said Nicole Riley, state director of the independent business federation, which is headquartered in Tennessee. “Many business leaders prefer complete reform of Medicaid before tossing more money on a raging wildfire.”

McAuliffe said that many hospitals in rural parts of the state are facing existential financial troubles and that even in Loudoun, one of the state’s wealthiest jurisdictions, failing to bring home billions of dollars in tax dollars collected under Obamacare would have far-reaching consequences at the local hospital. Tens of millions of dollars that could be used for everything from high-tech research to covering the poor would be missing, hospital officials said.

“It’s like the federal gas tax you pay every time you fill up the car,” McAuliffe said. The message from House Republicans is “we don’t want it,” McAuliffe said.

To try to take the edge off of pain being felt by the state’s hospitals, Republican delegates have proposed $118.6 million in additional Medicaid payments over two years.

But Katharine M. Webb, senior vice president of the Virginia Hospital & Healthcare Association, said the offer falls far short of what the hospitals would receive if there were 250,000 people newly insured under Medicaid. That would bring hospitals $692 million, Webb said. “The difference is vast,” she said.

Virginia’s hospitals have been aggressive proponents of Medicaid expansion. Hospital executives and their backers point to the hundreds of millions of dollars a year they are set to lose because of cuts that were part of the Affordable Care Act.

As part of the restructuring of federal health-care spending under Obamacare, certain Medicare cuts were accompanied by efforts to insure more people. But the U.S. Supreme Court ruled the Medicaid expansion optional, rather than a requirement, as originally written.

Covering hundreds of thousands of new patients in Virginia under Medicaid could help the hospitals’ bottom lines by adding new customers.

Sixty-six of the 67 Republicans in the House of Delegates voted against the Medicaid expansion plan.

Republican opponents say that the federal government is an unreliable long-term partner, given its own budget woes. The federal government has agreed to pay 100 percent of the Medicaid expansion costs for the first three years, and, after a gradual reduction, would pay 90 percent of those costs in the future. But even the 10 percent would be a costly hit to Virginia’s budget, House Republicans say.

Barbra Jill McCabe, a top pediatric emergency physician and manager, helped show McAuliffe around the pediatric ER in Loudoun, where a child screamed behind a glass partition. Regardless of the different opinions on how to improve America’s health system, she said, “I think expanding care for the folks who need it has to be part of the solution. . . . I’m faced with patients every day who are struggling because they don’t have that access.”

She said that with more patients on Medicaid, her emergency room would be less busy, which would benefit the children they treat.

“They’d be on medication to manage their asthma. They would have good preventative care. They would get their immunizations. . . . They would address their obesity. All of the epidemics that are coming along, primary care wants to try to address that,” McCabe said. “But if they don’t have access, how are they going to get that taken care of? They end up in here because they have complications that aren't being addressed."

Office of Governor Terry McAuliffe
1111 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Virginia 23219
804-371-0828

Perdue, Delaney (GOV)

Subject: Coffee with Senator McEachin and Dr. Jill McCabe
Location: Executive Mansion

Start: Sat 3/7/2015 10:00 AM
End: Sat 3/7/2015 10:45 AM

Recurrence: (none)

Meeting Status: Meeting organizer

Organizer: McAuliffe, T (GOV)

Required Attendees: ExecutiveMansion; Bishop, George (GOV); Lewkow, Victoria (GOV); Townes, Tutti (GOV); Purcell, Liza (GOV); 'dosm@governor.virginia.gov'; Bray, Liza (GOV); Stoney, Levar (GOV); Burch, Denise (GOV)

Senator Don McEachin, Dr. McCabe and her husband, Andrew McCabe will meet with the Governor at the Mansion for coffee – all three will travel with Governor to DPVA speech.

Perdue, Delaney (GOV)

Subject: TRM - Jill McCabe Event in Leesburg at Stone Tower Winery
Location: 19925 Hogback Mountain Rd, Leesburg, VA 20175

Start: Wed 8/5/2015 6:00 PM
End: Wed 8/5/2015 7:30 PM

Recurrence: (none)

Meeting Status: Meeting organizer

Organizer: McAuliffe, T (GOV)
Required Attendees: Natonski, Elizabeth (GOV)

Staff: John Heflin

Perdue, Delaney (GOV)

Subject: TRM: End of Campaign Event for Dr. Jill McCabe

Location: The Home of Bill & Jennifer Tyrrel [REDACTED]

Start: Thu 10/22/2015 8:00 PM

End: Thu 10/22/2015 8:45 PM

Recurrence: (none)

Organizer: McAuliffe, T (GOV)

Staff: Liz Natonski

Press: Closed

Format:

- YOU arrive and greeted by Ashley Sulewski
- Bill Tyrrell and Jim McDermott will introduce Dr. Jill McCabe
- Dr. McCabe speaks and introduces YOU
- YOU speak
- YOU mingle
- YOU depart

Attendees: 50

Perdue, Delaney (GOV)

Subject: TRM: McCabe Office Canvass Kick-Off
Location: 2864 Truro Parish Drive Broadlands, VA 20148

Start: Sun 11/1/2015 12:45 PM
End: Sun 11/1/2015 1:10 PM

Recurrence: (none)

Organizer: McAuliffe, T (GOV)

Staff: John Heflin

Press: Closed

Format:

- YOU arrive and greeted by Ashley Sulewski
- Andy Parker speaks and introduces Jill McCabe
- Jill McCabe speaks and introduces Senator Warner
- Senator Warner speaks and introduces YOU
- YOU speak
- YOU mingle
- YOU depart

Attendees: 40

Perdue, Delaney (GOV)

Subject: TRM: McCabe Office Canvass Kick-Off
Location: 2864 Truro Parish Drive Broadlands, VA 20148
Start: Tue 11/3/2015 11:20 AM
End: Tue 11/3/2015 11:40 AM
Recurrence: (none)

Meeting Status: Meeting organizer

Organizer: McAuliffe, T (GOV)
Required Attendees: Natonski, Elizabeth (GOV)

Staff: Levar Stoney

Press: Closed

Format:

- YOU arrive and greeted by Ashley Sulewski
- Liz Miller speaks and introduces Jill McCabe
- Jill McCabe speaks and introduces Attorney General Herring
- Attorney General Herring speaks and introduces Lt. Governor Ralph Northam
- Lt. Governor Ralph Northam speaks and introduces YOU
- YOU speak
- YOU depart

Attendees: 20